

B2B Buyer Persona & Customer Journey Mapping Template

A structured way to build personas from real evidence and map exactly where they need to hear from you — built from running multi-persona demand generation programmes for enterprise B2B brands.

How to use this: work through one persona at a time. Don't move to the journey mapping until the evidence section is genuinely filled in — a persona built on assumption produces a journey map built on assumption.

1. Build the persona from evidence, not assumption

- ☐ Job title, seniority and the specific decision they own — not a generic "marketing manager" label
- ☐ What they're actually trying to achieve, in their words, not yours
- ☐ The 2-3 challenges that keep this decision unresolved
- ☐ Where they genuinely spend attention: named publications, communities, or people they trust — checkable, not guessed
- ☐ What content format they reach for at each stage: article, datasheet, case study, peer conversation

2. Map the See, Think, Do, Care journey

- ☐ See — what triggers the need, and what they search for first
- ☐ Think — what they compare, and against what criteria
- ☐ Do — what convinces them to commit to you specifically
- ☐ Care — what makes them willing to recommend you internally

3. Assign channel and content per stage

- ☐ Which channel actually reaches them at that stage — not which channel is easiest for you
- ☐ Which specific content piece answers their question at that exact moment
- ☐ What the named next touchpoint is — a page, a form, a person
- ☐ What you'd consider evidence that this stage worked

4. Repeat per persona — never one map for everyone

- ☐ A technical buyer and an economic buyer rarely move through the same journey at the same pace
- ☐ Build a separate map for each genuinely distinct decision-maker in the buying group
- ☐ Where two personas share a touchpoint, that's a signal it's doing real work — where none overlap, check whether your content plan actually reflects that

Why this matters: most content plans are built around what's easy to produce, not around a specific person's specific question at a specific moment. The map above forces the second version — and it's the difference between content that gets consumed and content that gets ignored.

Faisal Mahmud

FRACTIONAL MARKETING DIRECTOR

I build and run demand generation programmes for B2B and enterprise brands. If your content plan isn't built on a real journey map, that's worth a proper look.

BOOK YOUR 15 MIN DISCOVERY CALL

faisalconsulting.co.uk