

LEGO Marketing Teardown: Gift Discovery and Choice

LEGO's shop supports many ways to browse for a gift, but the largest category pages still hand a lot of the decision back to the buyer. The outside-in question is whether choice confidence keeps pace with catalogue access.

SCOPEPublic sources checked on 23 September 2026. No claim is made about revenue, customer data, campaign performance or internal strategy.

THE WIDER LESSON

A large range needs decision support, not only more ways to filter it.

What is publicly visible

OBSERVED 01

Gift discovery supports several mental models

The public shop offers routes for little ones, older children and adults, alongside themes, interests and price points. That reflects the different ways buyers think about a gift.

OBSERVED 02

Some category routes still contain extensive choice

Age and adult category pages can contain large product sets. Filters narrow the catalogue, but the buyer still has to judge interest, difficulty, display value and occasion.

What the evidence may mean — and what would disprove it

POSSIBLE IMPLICATION

Choice confidence may matter more than catalogue access

A parent or enthusiast may enjoy exploring. An occasional gift buyer may want reassurance that the set fits the recipient, budget and desired type of experience.

ALTERNATIVE EXPLANATION

A credible reason the signal may be benign

Search, recommendation modules and logged-in LEGO Insiders data may already personalise discovery effectively. Public category pages do not show every recommendation state.

THE SMALLEST USEFUL TEST

Learn before committing to a larger fix

Test a three-question gift route covering recipient, preferred experience and budget. Give a shortlist of three sets with a plain-English reason for each recommendation.

What I would check internally

- 1 Which filters reduce time to purchase for occasional gift buyers?
- 2 Where do customers move repeatedly between age, theme and interest routes?
- 3 Does a small recommended shortlist improve confidence without reducing basket value?
- 4 Can LEGO Insiders add useful context without forcing account creation too early?
